thing of what is more horrifying: 1\ People trying to break free of the cages built around them by the power companies. 2\
People not being able to afford the widget[1] bought because of the unfeasible power consumption of producing the widget. [1] I know it's shorthand for any 3rd world country's most valuable export ~~~

feelin_googley > the widget[1] bought because of the unfeasible power consumption of producing > the widget.

This is not just applicable to the widget, this is applicable to any item manufactured in the United States. The widget is just an example. 2\ Let's take
this scenario: Intel produces "CPU microprocessor" in the USA (1). Many "manufacturers" (2) produce parts of the CPU. Each manufacturer uses an indirect power source such as a local power company. Manufacturers sell their CPU to "original equipment manufacturers" (OEMs) (3) who then assemble the CPUs into computers and sell the computers to "retailers" (4). When we buy the computers we pay for the CPU's electricity consumption from power company(s) (5) (1) (2) (3) (4) (5)
